Research and Teaching Areas

I conduct research across a broad range of empirical areas, including sport, credit, politics, and culture. I am a multi-methodologist with experience in quantitative modeling, time series, panel, and forecasting methods, text as data, archival research, and content analysis. I am deeply interested in how institutions, information, and context constrain and enable consequential social action.

I enjoy teaching classes across a wide variety of substantive areas, particularly the sociology of sport, sociological theory, statistical literacy, and data visualization. I have taught or assistant-taught classes at the undergraduate and graduate levels and have also valued the opportunity to mentor undergraduate research colleagues and other graduate students in my PhD program through our new cohort mentorship program.

Work Experience

Co-Course Designer | University of Washington, School of Social Work | 2025

Worked with colleague and co-course designer Glen Gonzalez to design a new class from scratch for the BASW program at the UW School of Social Work, “Race, Sports, and Social Justice.”

Research Assistant | University of Washington, Department of Sociology | 2024

Assisted dissertating graduate student Danny Nolan by doing qualitative coding for a number of in-depth interviews, for their dissertation project: “Stories from the End of the World: Autobiographical Maintenance through the COVID-19 Pandemic.”

Researcher/Associate Producer | Words + Pictures, New York, NY | 2021–2023

Planned and designed overall series structure, managed media, and conducted archival research for The Last Lectures, a thirteen-hour lecture series on athlete activism and sociology of sport presented by Dr. Harry Edwards. Assisted film editors and structured production workflow.

The Last Lectures has since been adopted as a key curriculum piece by many sociology departments, including those at Emory University, New York University, Vanderbilt University, and the University of California, Berkeley (Cal has created an endowed professorship to teach this material).

Curatorial Intern | Museo Archaeologico, Arezzo, Tuscany, Italy | Spring 2020

Catalogued and photographed museum display objects to update record-keeping. Translated documentation between Italian and English.

Research Intern | American Museum of Natural History, New York, NY | Summer 2019

Conducted literature review advocating inclusion of Indigenous voices in museum spaces. Specialized focus on captioning and reinterpretation of installations.

Curatorial Intern | Museum of the City of New York, New York, NY | Summer 2019

Contributed to acclaimed City/Game basketball exhibition. Catalogued objects, conducted research, assisted with interviews, contributed writing to exhibition companion book.
